In its current dual-connection charging technology, for the purpose of charging, a set of destination terminals and a set of source terminals which may be connected to the destination terminals have to be connected through an independent signal control of the charging, where a destination terminal means a terminal served for receiving a charging service, and a source terminal means a terminal served for providing a charging service. That is, the common signal control is adopted, and the charging service of the destination terminal is performed through connecting the destination terminal to the source terminal. In this way, the existing dual-connection charging technology is adopted to the charging, and the destination terminal and the source terminal are required to be of a great number, e.g., tens of thousands, so as to ensure a charging amount and a charging speed. However, the charging amount and the charging speed of a mobile device will reach a bottleneck in a reality of the existing dual-connection charging technology if the destination terminals and the source terminals are increased in scale.

. Furthermore, the total number of follicles in the control group and MSCs group was much less than that in the LPS/GC group, indicating that MSCs can obviously restrain inflammation. Additionally, the number of inflammatory cells in the MSCs treatment group was smaller than that in the LPS/GC group. This result indicated that MSCs significantly reduce the degree of LPS/GC-induced inflammation. The detection of NF- κ B by immunohistochemistry and Western blotting demonstrated that NF- κ B is mainly expressed in the cytoplasm of GCs and that NF- κ B is more highly expressed in the LPS/GC group. Meanwhile, IHC showed that the total NF- κ B positive cells in the LPS/GC group were more than in the control group, and NF- κ B expression in the nucleus was positively correlated to the total NF- κ B-positive cell counts. Furthermore, IHC also indicated that NF- κ B positive cells in the MSCs treatment group was less than that in the LPS/GC group. These results demonstrated that NF- κ B expression is higher in LPS/GC-activated GCs than in the non-activated GCs, indicating that the NF- κ B signaling pathway is activated in the process of LPS/GC-activated GCs and that NF- κ B plays an important role in this process. Besides, the mechanism by which MSCs inhibit the NF- κ B signaling pathway may be that MSCs effectively suppress the activation of GCs through indirect ways. MSCs can directly suppress the inflammation of GCs by secretion of anti-inflammatory cytokines (IL-10, TGF- β), or reduce the contact between GCs and inflammatory factors by recruiting other MSCs through cell-to-cell contact ([@b9-etm-0-0-9514],[@b16-etm-0-0-9514]). In conclusion, this study demonstrated that MSCs can significantly inhibit the activation of GCs induced by LPS/GCs. This study could provide a new mechanism for the treatment of periodontal disease.
