If you ask anyone what a "rethinker" is, they'll typically describe someone with a bit more radical ideas than most. Follower of "trends and fads" -- that, of course, implies that there's a lack of direction in one's life. A "rethinker" is the exact opposite of that. Ultimately, "rethinkers" are a great creative force. They can't just wait for a certain product to come out and be excited by it -- they just go ahead and make their own. Which is how Hidaka, the designer and creator behind Gakushu Asobi Inc, came up with the idea for an ill-fated 90s toy: a stuffed animal that spoke! What does a stuffed toy that says "BEEP-BEEP-BEEP-BEEEEEEP?" do? Grab an inflatable sphere, and you've got yourself a speaking bear! The bear had a rough start. It was licensed to Asmik Ace in Japan, and it became something of a hit -- it had an anime-like appearance and it didn't move like most toys. So it found a new home at a toy store called Bensatsu in France, and it stayed there for nearly a decade. I'm pretty sure that me, my sister and my grandmother have all played BEEP-BEEP-BEEEEEEP -- it became really popular. But the toy never went on sale (in fact, Asmik Ace didn't even know what the sales figures were), and after a decade BEEP-BEEEEEP became just another forgotten piece of toy. So why does a simple toy from the 90s today is so exciting? In short, because Gakushu Asobi wants to bring that toy out again. While the idea itself has 09e8f5149f
