You can do the same things in the Rectangular Marquee Tool (M) as you can using the Crop Tool (C) or the Free Transform Tool (T). Everything you do in Photoshop is done on a layer. Layers are a very powerful and highly useful tool for creating and combining images and altering objects within them. Creating a new layer is done using the Layer menu (Layers>New). After opening a file in Photoshop, you'll be presented with the Empty Layers palette (Layers>New). Figure 2 shows the empty Layers palette. Layers that are created beyond this limit don't function until you delete them. Managing Layers You can make layers visible or invisible by clicking on the eye icon in the Layers palette (Figure 4). You can group layers together and separate them by using the Layer Group icon in the Layers palette (Figure 5). You can also use the Layers palette to show or hide individual layers. You can get an idea of the number of layers you have by looking at the Layers count in the Layers palette (Figure 6). You can also get this information in the Info palette (Figure 7). Figure 4. The Eye icon in the Layers palette toggles between showing or hiding a layer. Figure 5. You can group layers together using the Layer Group icon. Figure 6. Coconut water The phrase coconut water derives from the Malay kadalup or kadalup gula melaka, referring to the water that exudes out of the white, interior coconut shell. Coconut water has a very high percentage of carbohydrate; sugar accounts for at least 40% of the sugars in coconut water. Numerous scientific studies have shown that coconut water has many positive effects. A study in 2003 found that coconut water provides more potassium than human urine. A study published in the journal Nutrients (2003) found that coconut water may have a therapeutic role in individuals who are feeling dehydrated. A boy, on the other hand, never has to worry about this. He can be free to focus on his own pursuits. He can have the brains. He may even choose to grow the muscles. And every boy believes that he is better than every girl. In most societies, girls and boys are treated differently simply because of their sex. But what happens if we socialized girls and boys the same way, from birth? And what happens if the boys and girls were segregated from birth? For example, in Sweden, girls were given more access to education than boys. But in America, where there are more opportunities for boys, boys are given more access to education. Hence, a gender gap in education was created. Sometimes this gender gap in education affects women more, because they are given less opportunities to learn as men are. In this way, they are driven to pursue careers that they are not given enough support to do. This video created by the Lynda.com, gives you a general overview of gender-related issues. These gender-related issues are why the United States has such a low level of women's participation in political leadership. Almost half of the people in Congress are men. This gender gap in education also created gender
