Commonly occurring in women during and shortly after pregnancy, the infection is typically termed as a UTI. Signs and symptoms UTIs manifest as bladder inflammation, a fever or painful urination. The symptoms are often caused by ascending bacteria from the rectum, perineum or vagina through the urethra to the bladder, but occasionally the bacteria lodge in the ureters. Symptoms are most common during or after sexual activity, and are less common after a bowel movement. The symptoms of a UTI are often similar to that of an infection of the bladder, including frequency of urination (especially in the night) and urgency. However, if there is swelling
